ePsolutions appoints Chuck Farley as Director of Application Delivery

Company recruits 10-year veteran of the deregulated telecommunications market

AUSTIN, TX – April 9, 2007 – ePsolutions, Inc., a leader in back office solutions for competitive energy resellers, today announced it has hired Chuck Farley as the company's director of application delivery. In his role, Farley is chartered with ensuring new product releases and capabilities are delivered correctly and on time, recruiting talent for ePsolutions growing development and testing team and strengthening employee training and development processes.

Farley brings more than ten years of software application experience to ePsolutions. Prior to ePsolutions, Farley served as a manager with Broadwing Communications. Previously, Farley was the Manager of Application Development for Level 3 Communications. Farley has also held managerial positions at IXC Communication and Boeing Computer Services.

ePsolutions' partners, investors and executive team felt Farley's expertise managing large scale teams, combined with his background and passion for quality and robust product testing would add a greater degree of excellence and efficiency to the company's overall processes.

"Out of a range of candidates, we selected Chuck due in large part to his passion for quality and his exciting vision for where we could take emPower over the next five years," said Matthew Gill, CEO of ePsolutions. "We feel very lucky that Chuck agreed to join our rapidly growing organization."

"Based upon my past experience in the deregulated telecommunications market and the similarity it bears to the deregulated electric markets, I am extremely excited to work with ePsolutions and its suite of applications," said Farley. "I will initially focus on recruiting and growing our pool of exceptional technical talent so we can continue to deliver leading edge software that creates a competitive advantage for our clients."
